Use of Classical Herbal Formulas for Complementary Management of Cancers

Presented by Henry Liang

Cancer is a major cause of illness in Australia and has a substantial social and economic impact on individuals, families and the community. Although new cancer therapies including targeted therapies and immunotherapy have been innovated since 20th century, there are substantial limitations of use, such as limited candidates for these therapies, drug resistance, advised effects etc. Therefore, cancer patients are increasingly seeking out complementary and alternative medicine. Chinese herbal medicine (CHM) is an important approach for health care and has long been used for managing patients with cancer. Classical herbal formulas (CHF) serve as fundamental formats for the prescription of CHM. This seminar will provide you with practical and up-to-date knowledge of CHFs for complementary management of common cancers based on the holistic concept of Chinese medicine as well as scientific studies.

Upon the successful completion of this seminar, participants will be able to use some Classical herbal formulas for:

- Relieving some symptoms associated to cancer or cancer therapies
- Supporting vital energy of cancer patients
- Boosting immune functions of cancer patients
- Maintaining quality of life of cancer survivors

This seminar will be presented by PPT lecture, in conjunction with question answering and case discussion. Lecture notes will be provided to participants.
